Solution:

- Common Law is not written down but depends on the judgments of judges over the centuries also known as precedents
 - Referred to as 'traditional law'
 - Refers to judgments of similar cases in past
- Statute Law is laid down by Acts of Parliament referred to as legislation
 - Brought in by technological advancements, social changes
 - E.g. laws to regulate child labor

Q. No. 3 (2.5 Points) Write short note on following, giving examples for each

- a) Reservation of Title
- b) Reservation of Function

Solution

Unqualified people can do serious damage to public safety practicing specialized professions.

Reservation of Title

- the use of the name of the profession may be restricted to those people who are appropriately qualified
- In the UK, for example, the Architects Act 1997 makes it a criminal offence to call yourself an architect unless you are registered with the Architects Registration Board.

Reservation of Function

- the law may state that certain activities are restricted
 - to people with appropriate qualifications or
 - to members of particular specified professional bodies
- in England, only members of the Institute of Chartered Accountants are allowed to audit the accounts of public companies.
